Course Availability in English:
The availability of courses taught entirely in English may depend on the selected courses and the semester of enrollment. While some courses may have English descriptions available in the course catalog, others may not. The absence of an English course description does not necessarily mean that the course cannot be taken by international exchange students. However, the language of instruction and the availability of English-language learning support should be confirmed for each selected course. We therefore recommend that the student identify their preferred courses in advance so that we can help clarify the available options and determine an appropriate study plan.

Exchange students at JGU are not restricted to a specific school or department and are generally permitted to select courses across our various schools, subject to course availability and any applicable academic prerequisites.Students from undergraduate programmes are also welcome to explore courses offered across JGU. However, as some courses may be academically advanced or designed specifically for postgraduate-level students, we may provide additional guidance where required to help students select courses that are appropriate to their academic background and level of study.For students interested in Law courses, we would provide separate guidance during the course-selection process, as certain Law courses may have specific academic requirements or prerequisites.Our team will be happy to support the students throughout the course-selection process and assist them in identifying suitable courses based on their academic background and interests.
